Antioch University Los Angeles Professional Practices Group “A Night to Remember”

One night only student art show to be held at the Mandrake in Los Angeles

CULVER CITY, CA – January 21, 2009 – The students of the AULA Professional Practices class proudly announce “A Night to Remember: Antioch University Professional Practices Group Show” to be held on Friday, February 13th at 7 pm. Shrouded in mystery, Friday the 13th is a night in which obsessions, fantasies, fears, and danger come together to create infinite possibility within the imagination. It is a night that is unfettered by the restraints of Logic. The pall of this urban legend surrounds the one night only art show entitled A Night to Remember.

The participating artists from Antioch University Los Angeles’ Professional Practices art class include Meghan Michelle Sepanik, Darby Bailey, Cindy Short, Tara Foley, and Crystal Marcelle Moore. Dealing with a variety of media and topics, Sepanik’s family-as-nose, Bailey’s nonsense, Short’s bitches, Foley’s identity, and Moore’s gender, there is guaranteed to be something for every visitor. Entering the world of the collective body of work is akin to stepping into the twilight zone of the unconscious. The class is led by veteran artist Sharon Kagan, who has been exhibiting locally since the early nineties.

Antioch University Los Angeles has been honored to serve the diverse communities of the greater Los Angeles area for the last 35 years. AULA is a small non-profit institution, passionate about our core values (social justice, service to community, life long learning) and how we learn (wedding theory to practice, with a strong emphasis on adult learners, small classes, and encouraging the full potential of each student). With roots at the heart of progressive higher education since the founding of Antioch College in 1852, we, together with our sister campuses in Seattle, Santa Barbara, Keene, New Hampshire and Yellow Springs, Ohio continue the tradition as an institution of conscience devoted to educating principled practitioners who dedicate their professional lives to making a positive difference in our communities.

The event will begin at 7 pm on Friday, February 13th at The Mandrake, located at 2692 South La Cienega Blvd in Los Angeles. The Mandrake is a unique space that promotes the progression of culture and ideas amidst the backdrop of a hip and slick social scene. The event promises to bring together a diverse group of intellectuals, artists, academics, social progressives, and bohemians.
